Neon Explosion

Art Statement:

A lineless style filled with bold bright colors. The color palette would include some less saturated and softer colors to combat eye strain. This style would use flat color and extreme simplification of form to create visually striking assets.

Value Statement:

This style is simplistic and attention grabbing. Color is an effective way of holding a child's attention and keeping them engaged, and so this style could be good for keeping focus in a chaotic classroom. The flat color helps the style not become too visually overwhelming.

Inspirations

Subdued Safari

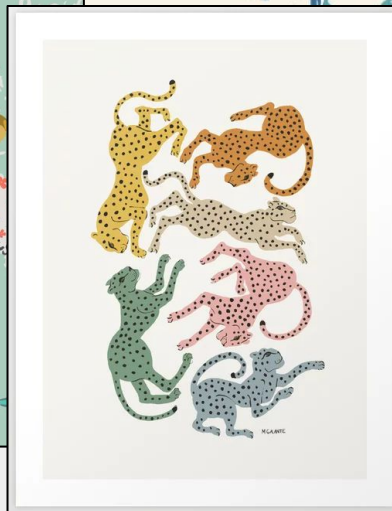

Art Statement:

A lineless style that uses muted flat colors. With extreme simplification of forms and an emphasis on curves, this style is simplistic and calming. This style is largely used with baby or toddler products.

Value Statement:

This style is already used for children's products and appeals to a younger audience. This style is calming and could be beneficial to mood regulation in the classroom. This style would relate to the narrative well as it mirrors the colors and simplicity sometimes found in kids story books.

A colorful, stylized world map showing various animals and plants from different continents. The map is divided into North America, South America, Africa, Eurasia, Australia, and Antarctica. Each continent is populated with its characteristic wildlife. For example, North America has a bear, moose, and bison; Africa has a giraffe, zebra, and lion; and Antarctica has penguins and a seal. The oceans are labeled: Pacific Ocean, Atlantic Ocean, Indian Ocean. There are also small inset maps showing a city street scene and a river landscape.

Kids Coloring

Art Statement:

A style using bold black outlines and techniques that mirror the materials used by children to color. All assets would have two states, blank and colored. This style could use less simplification of forms or be more exaggerated.

Value Statement:

This style would appeal to children due to its familiarity. All kids know this style and thus this can be good for maintaining children's attention. This style could also play into the narrative element of the map being drawn by the child.
